Taxonomy Development

Information Challenge

We all know that the amount of information is exploding. According to one source, it doubles every 11 hours. Studies show that knowledge workers spend 15 to 25 percent of the work day searching for information. Only half of the searches are successful.

Calculations estimate that a company employing 1,000 knowledge workers could lose an average of $6 million per year on unsuccessful searching. Poor content classification systems contribute greatly to this problem.

Given these factors, how can you organize vital information so that it is readily available to employees, clients, and partners?

Cadence Group Solution

Cadence Group® is a seasoned information management (IM) firm that helps you significantly improve access to content through better classification, organization, and structure.

This information may be web content, electronic documents and records, archives, reference material, catalog entries, e-commerce items, database records, and other materials.

In addition, implementing a taxonomy enables an e-commerce customer to find a product more quickly. Studies show that when customers find what they are looking for within three clicks of their mouse, they are more apt to buy that product.

Whether you need metadata classification, an information taxonomy, corporate thesaurus, or other semantic solutions, Cadence Group has a classification solution for you.

Taxonomy versus Thesaurus

An information taxonomy is a hierarchical classification system that organizes information into meaningful categories. A sample medical taxonomy might look like this:

>Diseases & Conditions
  >>Heart
    >>>Angina
      >>>>Aortic Valve Stenosis
      >>>>Palpitations

A corporate thesaurus, on the other hand, is a listing of preferred terms, phrases, and terminology, as well as the relationships between those words and phrases, their variants, and synonyms. A sample thesaurus entry for “angina” might look like this:

Angina: angina pectoris, chest pain, coronary artery disease, stable angina, unstable angina

Used together, a taxonomy and thesaurus form the foundation for a web site’s information architecture and navigational structure.

We offer two approaches to meet your need for classification solutions — consulting and facilitated.

Consulting Approach

With the consultative approach our consultants analyze, design, and build your taxonomy — based on your organization’s information needs and goals for your taxonomy project. You receive these deliverables:

- ▶ Scoping document
- ▶ Research summary report
- ▶ Requirements document
- ▶ Custom taxonomy design document
- ▶ Completed taxonomy structure

Once the taxonomy is built, we establish processes and procedures for on-going maintenance by your staff or a Cadence Group resource.

Facilitated Workshop Approach

With our facilitated approach, an experienced taxonomy development consultant designs a custom workshop for your staff. The workshop usually covers three days and brings together an organization’s subject matter and content experts to facilitate the development of your taxonomy.

We tailor the taxonomy workshop to fit your particular needs and audience. Prior to the workshop, our consultants work with you to prepare a scoping document, requirements document, and conceptual design.

Seven Signs You Need a Taxonomy

1. You performed a search on a topic and received hundreds of pages of results. Your advanced search got it down to 30 pages. Is this the best to hope for?
2. You know e-mails, news, published reports and other documents exist on your intranet on exactly the subject you want, but you can't seem to bring them all together in one comprehensive search.
3. You've assigned custom preferences to your portal and subscribed to particular topical e-mail alerts, but you're still getting junk.
4. You know your products and services are e-commerce supported, but your customers are not buying because they can't find what they need.
5. You built a great knowledgebase. But, people still have trouble finding answers.
6. Your company's classification systems are in conflict. How can you get everyone to "speak the same language"?
7. You suspect that your company could be one of those losing an average of $6 million per year on unsuccessful searching.
